

ABSTRACT

A connector for placement between an injector of contrast media and a venous catheter is described. The connector is adapted to protect the body of the catheter and the valve closing the catheter from excessive pressure and flow rate of the fluid being injected. The connector includes a valve bypass element to open the valve and pass the fluid beyond the valve, and a pressure control element to maintain the flow pressure below a selected value.